HEART and HOME PROBLEMS

MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON

Dear Mrs. Thompson: Several years ago when I was 18, I married a young man who was my first love. We were not at all happy because he didn't make much money and he thought I ought to economize while he smoked, drank occasionally, and did just about what he wanted to. He was very kind at times, and at other times he was cruel and would go for days without speaking unless he had to. We had a baby after we had been married a year, and it died when it was almost three years old. This broke our hearts and it made him kinder for a while and then he began to drink a great deal. After we had been married six years I divorced him.

I went home to my parents and while there became acquainted with a very fine widower about 40 years old. He had one daughter who was away at school. He asked me to marry him and I did. He was always good to me and gave me whatever I wanted, but I did not love him as much as I did my first husband. Two years after I married this man he died, leaving me one-third of his money and a very good income.

I left the town where I was living and went back to the one where I lived with my first husband. While I was there I heard where he worked and I telephoned him. He came to see me and he begged me to come back to him. He said that he still loved me and that if I came he would stop drinking entirely. Of course I love him and always will. I have enough money so that I can be independent and I never intend to put the money in his name, although I love him. I am still afraid that it might encourage him to drink. He is successful now. Some of the time he works in the office at home and some of the time he is a salesman on the road. He still drinks and gets drunk, but it doesn't interfere with his work. I cannot bear the smell of liquor and so he has promised to give it up. Should I marry him again?

CLARA D.

I wouldn't marry him for three or four months if I were you. Give him time to prove that he still loves you and loves you enough to give up drink. Your plan to keep your money in your own hands is good. Keep it by all means, but depend upon him for support and let him think that he is necessary to you.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am 18 years old and I am engaged to a young man. We have gone together over a year. Lately I heard that he was running around with other girls. I asked him and he said that he didn't see that it was any of my business if he was. Of course it was my business because of our engagement. Then I learned that what I heard was true and he wouldn't promise to stop. Now he is very cross over the least little thing. Shall I break my engagement?

ROSE MARY.

If the man loved you he would not go with other girls, especially after you asked him not to. I think you better break your engagement.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: (1) When a young man and young lady are walking together should the young man take the young lady's arm? (2) If it rains should the young man or the young lady carry the umbrella?

THANK YOU.

(1) He should take it when crossing streets and rough places, but he should not take it all the time.

(2) The young man should carry it.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I have been going with a young man for three weeks and he wants me to marry him right away. I love him, but I don't feel that I know him well enough to marry him. He is a stranger in town and he wants me to go away with him. My parents are opposed to the marriage. What shall I do?

WORRIED.

You have not known the man long enough to be acquainted. Let him leave alone and correspond with him in a year if you still care for each other I think it will be safe to marry.
